Background Information

Playboy Magazine was first published in 1953 by Hugh Hefner, and is one of the most recognizable pornographic brands. Although Playboy Enterprises began as an American company, its magazines are now distributed internationally. Playboy Enterprises also publishes international editions of Playboy specific to particular countries/ regions.

From its inception, the magazine featured erotic nude photography of women. However, unlike magazines such as Hustler, Playboy billed itself as a more serious ‘gentleman’s magazine.’ Famously, the first edition featured a nude centerfold of Marilyn Monroe. Because of the magazine’s more upper-class cachet, a number of female celebrities have posed for the magazine throughout its years.

Playboy published a number of articles and features about sex and sexuality, including instructional articles and reviews of erotic materials. In addition to themes of sexual representation, this collection is also a useful resource for researchers looking into literary essays and short stories. Because of its status as a men's magazine, Playboy was able to publish literary work that mainstream magazines might have rejected for being too explicit. Especially in its early decades, Playboy also published a considerable amount of literary fiction by writers such as Vladimir Nabokov and Margaret Atwood. In particular, Playboy published a considerable amount of science fiction by writers including J.G. Ballard, Frederick Pohl, Ray Bradbury, and Ursula K. LeGuin.

Scope and Content

This collection comprises an almost complete run of Playboy Magazine from 1964 to July of 1993. This collection also included 3 issues from 1963, as well as three additional issues published in 1997 and 2000 featuring Canadian content. Also included in the collection are a 'Girls of the World' special edition published in 1971, and the 45th Anniversary Edition published in 1999.
